Experts in battle of breasts

Surgeon and nudists among witnesses for seven local women

By John O'Brien
Democrat and Chronicle

Seven women arrested for baring their breasts at Cobbs Hill Park three months ago will have the support of psychologists, an anthropologist, nudists and a local breast surgeon when they go to trial on Monday.

Those experts, and possibly several more, will be flown into Rochester from around the country to testify in support of the women's claim that a state law discriminates against women by prohibiting them, but not men, from going topless in public.

The women wanted to be arrested when they doffed their shirts at Cobbs Hill on June 21 so they could challenge that law in court.

The women will pay for the transportation costs of the experts with donations from supporters of their cause, said Mary Lou Schloss, one of the seven women who were charged with exposure of a person.

About 20 people from different parts of the country have donated about $800 to help offset the women's legal costs, she said. The contributors heard about the women's trial through national media coverage and through a nudists' newsletter, Schloss said.

One of the witnesses who will be called by the women will be Dana Raphael of Connecticut, who co-founded the Human Lactation Institute with reknowned anthropologist Margaret Meade, said David R. Moss, a lawyer representing Ramona Santorelli, a leader of the women's protest.

Raphael will testify that the law enhances a public stigma against breast-baring that deters mothers from breastfeeding their babies in public, even though the law allows public breastfeeding, Moss said.

Also testifying will be two psychologists from Iowa, Marilyn Storey and Melissa Farley, who will testify about the effects of society's concept that breasts should be covered in public.

A breast surgeon from a Rochester hospital will testify that men's and women's breasts are basically the same, except hormones make women's grow bigger, Moss said. He would not release the surgeon's name, saying it might give the prosecution an advantage before the trial.

The women planned to send out a news release to television stations and newspapers today announcing the names of the expert witnesses.

The surgeon also will testify that society's stigma over women's breasts has resulted in a large number of women asking for unnecessary and sometimes harmful breast surgery because they want "Barbie doll breasts," Moss said.

their political records to the voters.

"There's no way we're going to be able to match them (the Republicans) dollar for dollar," said Tim Taylor, a coordinator of the Democrats' state Senate campaign committee.

And Monroe County Democratic Committee Chairman Michael Miller said the Mark Green-John Dyson primary this week showed that money is not the most important factor in an election. Green was outspent by nearly 800-1 but defeated Dyson on Tuesday.

"What we are lacking in money we'll

The Democrats found themselves facing a situation similar to six years ago on Tuesday when Green upset Dyson in the Democratic primary after a sometimes bitter campaign in which Green depicted Dyson as disloyal to the Democratic cause.

Yesterday, Dyson actively campaign for votes l Party line. "I said all along campaign (on the Liberal n a man of my word," said is farm in Dutchess County.

In 1980, Democrat Elizabeth Holtzman and Liberal Party candidate Jacob Javits split their votes, allowing D'Amato to win election with about 44 percent of the vote. D'Amato, with the Republican-Conservative endorsement, is seeking re-election this year.

"Dyson is not Javits, and I think everyone would acknowledge that," Green said in a press conference at the downtown headquarters of the Monroe County Democratic Party.

"Jacob Javits was a four-term senator with great visibility and stature. People had a habit of voting for him after four elections. Very few people still know John Dyson. There is no habit of voting for Quattrociocchi said he has been getting substantial advice from the state party, which is helping to prepare some of the television and radio commercials he will use. him."

Green said he intends to campaign on D'Amato's record, and he challenged the Long Island Republican to seven debates. He said he will win the election if he can inform voters about D'Amato's voting record.

"Al D'Amato has a hidden record of votes against Rochester and Monroe County and the state of New York. He's going to have to now explain his hidden record of votes against us," Green said, citing D'Amato's votes against a bill to assist workers who have lost their jobs as a result of imports.

"Why did Al D'Amato vote to actually cut Social Security and Medicare to our senior citizens? Why has Al D'Amato voted time and again against a woman's right to choose (abortion) and to send women back into the back alleys?"

Green said that with Gov. Mario Cuomo leading a strong Democratic ticket and Democrats outnumbering Republicans by 1.25 million voters, "Al D'Amato is a fugitive from the law of political averages."

Green said that Democratic Mayor Ed Koch's decision not to endorse Green would have "very little" effect. "In the end it's not endorsements that matter, it's character, it's content, it's conviction."

Experts to join battle of breasts

Other women refuse to be checked by physicians for breast cancer because they don't want to expose their breasts as a result of the stigma attached to bare breasts, the surgeon is expected to testify.

The women claim in court papers that the state law denies equal protection between the sexes, serves no important government interest, and actually works against important government and public concerns.

Assistant District Attorney Thomas J. Brilbeck, who is prosecuting the women, said he will call about five police officers to the witness stand, but does not intend to bring in any witnesses to rebut the testimony of the women's experts.

Besides Santorelli and Schloss, the defendants are Nikki Craft, Kathleen Reilly, Deborah Seymour, Elise Tooley and Lynn Zicari.

All seven women plan to testify in the trial.
